Moore Public Schools Celebrates Native American Heritage Month

MOORE, OK. – November is Native American Indian Heritage Month and the Moore Public Schools (MPS) Native American Education department planned learning and celebratory activities districtwide.

“It is important to understand and honor what Native Americans have overcome to be successful leaders. Our district administration and staff are proud to provide educational opportunities to our Native American students and share their heritage and culture with our schools and community,” said Jimmy Martin, Federal Programs Director.

Some of the activities planned for November are:

- Assemblies featuring MPS Student Dance Troupe at all three high schools: Westmoore, November 2; Moore, November 19; and Southmoore, December 2.
- “Rock Your Mocs Week,” will be November 16-20, which is a districtwide event for students to wear their moccasins, Tribal shirt, favorite beadwork, and more.

These activities and many educational opportunities are through the Title VI and Johnson O’Malley (JOM) Native American Education programs which are federally funded. These programs promote understanding of the American Indian culture and increase academic achievement and improve graduation rates.

“The Native American heritage and culture is alive today and we honor our strength and resilience. Our countless contributions to our state and country are important to us,” said Caryn Record, MPS Native American Education Coordinator.
